Address of Welcome.*

The children of the "Primaries" in conference today should seek to learn the will of God and His commands.

We welcome those who come to teach, in wisdom's path to guide, lest thoughtless youth to evil ways should ever turn aside.

We know temptations great abound to lead astray the youth, unless their lives are governed by the love of God and truth.

We welcome all who come to hear, that they may know the blessing of eternal life, which from the gospel flows.

Of all the dwellers on the earth, none have such cause to praise and glorify our Father's name as "Saints of Latter Days."

If we could only realize how greatly we are blessed, we'd thank Him for our happy lot and try to serve Him best.

To God, our Father in the Heavens, our first best praise is due, because He has restored again the Gospel, pure and true.

Has given to us a prophet, with twelve apostles too, and teachers to instruct us in the way we ought to go.

We pray the holy spirit may within each heart remain; we ask this in the worthy name of Jesus Christ, amen.

Regarding The Local Newspaper.

A local paper is not the public executioner with malevolent thoughts and calloused heart, as many believe it to be. It must often praise an enemy and overlook his faults and perpetually rise above personality and prejudice. But the judgment of the most discreet may sometimes be at error.

The person who, it was thought, would enjoy a harmless account of some incident, even though it were at his own expense, may be, and often is, the very one to take offense. He will, as it is the custom of human nature, consider himself very much wronged, and although he might restrain his feelings if incensed by some individual, he will pour out all his bitterness against the paper.

The fact is, however, those who think the purpose of a newspaper is to injure the community, or anyone in it, are greatly mistaken, and ought to learn to see the matter in its true light.—Red Wing (Minn.) Republican.

Plays and Playgoers.

Home talent assisted by Richard Foote and Annie Plunkett in "The Hunchback of Florence" held the boards at the Young Men's opera house last Friday evening. This as its name indicates is an Italian drama, and eight of Spanish Fork's young people enjoyed the novel sensation of appearing on the stage dressed in the costumes of the time of 200 years ago.

The story of this play was of the loves of several people who when it was all over with didn't live happily—the leading characters being killed off in the last act. In fact, which in the humble opinion of the HERALD's dramatic critic, was a wholly undeserved fate. It was a good play, however, and well rendered.

Of the amateurs the young ladies, Misses Clara Jones and Ella Smith, had the most difficult parts to play. They acquitted themselves well in every respect, bringing out truly every phase of character assumed and evoking understanding thoroughly the spirit of the piece.

Genial John Banks played the part of the heavy villain, and he did it so well that that individual's fate in the last act was regarded as well deserved. Z. P. Romeril was the lover in the play and his impatience at the dallying of gay and burly Harry Hughes (in the character of a servant) found an echo in many a young spectator's heart. Bertie's desire for something to eat and the anxious lover's efforts to see his lady (Miss Snell in the character of Lisa) glared frequently, much to the amusement of the audience. Miss Snell is an Empire gown and with her hair dressed in the Italian style reminded one of the Goddess of Liberty.

Miss Jones as Signorina Pis, the betrayed wife, had the saddest part to play and seemed the instrument in the hands of fate to precipitate the fatal ending. C. W. Booth was a very good priest, but the other characters didn't appear to have much use for his advice, hence their ultimate downfall, no doubt. George Ainge and M. J. Martell, as a Florentine and an officer, had minor parts which they rendered successfully and disappeared in the first act.

The professionals in the cast, Richard Foote and Annie Plunkett, took the characters of Hugo, the leading one, and of Elena, a lady's maid, respectively. They are both good actors. The professionals and amateurs blended well in this play and produced a good entertainment.

A feature of the entertainment not down on the bills, but which was a regular one in all of Mr. Foote's appearances here, was an exhibition of nerve which no doubt took years of cultivation of a great natural gift to produce. A little gall is a good thing but this man has an abnormal development in that respect and Spanish Fork people weary of too much of a good thing like the rest of humanity. For his first performance here he issued to ladies here a large number of invitations to the play gratis. The ladies accepted the invitations, attended and during the play listened to sarcastic remarks about a "dead head house". They made no particular comment, however, though the next night's house didn't exhibit a large number present of the ladies who were roasted for accepting the invitations extended for the previous evening. Those who did attend were favored with a repetition of the "dead head" remarks.

Just before the last act of the "Hunchback of Florence" was when the manager's check was the most nearly sublime. He appeared before the curtain and made another performance for the next night, rung in the dead head chestnut and a few fresh insults. On hearing this his amateur allies flatly declined to play another night or seem in any way in sympathy with him.

The proceeds of the evening were about $50. Mr. Foote tried to saddle the Opera house bill upon the amateurs, but failing in that pocketed the net receipts and forgot (?) to pay the orchestra.

No one denies that Mr. Foote is an artist—both in his profession and in his displays of cheek. The young people who drew his most profitable house for him are richer in experience, and also have the satisfaction of having appeared before their admiring fellow citizens in $140 worth of good clothes of the vintage of sixteen hundred and something.

If at any time Mr. Foote's colossal nerve should make him wish to appear on the Spanish Fork stage again, there is no doubt but that the people would be glad to greet him in the star act of a back-number hen-fruit matinee with feline (deceased) accompaniments.

Charles O'Malley and his company were at the Y. M. Opera house last evening in the comedy "College Chums". This is a deservedly popular piece but owing to bitter experience with shows here recently the people did not turn out well. Mr. O'Malley will be back this way again after a couple of months and will no doubt draw a better house.

A. C. Hatch Nominated.

Hon. A. C. Hatch of Wasatch carried the convention of the Fourth judicial district at Provo, Tuesday by storm, and received the nomination by a big majority.

The convention met in the forenoon and was called to order by Chairman Graham of Utah county. A temporary organization was perfected, with J. P. Davis of Uintah chairman, and Miss Sarah Stubbs of Provo secretary.

S. S. Jones of Provo delivered an address of welcome. The usual committee were appointed and adjournment taken until 1:30 p. m. In the afternoon the committee on credentials reported all but four precincts present. The committee on permanent organization and order of business reported in favor of John Huber of Wasatch for permanent chairman; B. Baehman, Jr., permanent secretary; Mrs. Kate Douglass, assistant secretary; John McNeil, chaplain; Charles W. Booth, sergeant-at-arms. The committee recommended that the voting be done by precincts, and that a majority of all delegates elected be necessary to a quorum.

The report was adopted and the permanent officers installed. Chairman Huber made a brief speech on assuming the duties of the chair. The committee on resolutions through Abram Halladay, chairman, reported in favor of adopting the platform of the Republican State convention, and pledging allegiance and hearty support of the same. The report of the committee on credentials was adopted, after being amended so as to consider each ward of Provo a precinct.

Thomas John moved to take an informal ballot to place before the convention likely candidates. The motion was promptly defeated. Nominations were then begun, speeches being limited to five minutes.

S. S. Jones thought the candidate for Judge should be a man of sound legal training, careful and honest. He ought to be a Christian gentleman. He had a man whom he believed would fill all requirements. Though not born in Utah, as the pulse of this great nation beats, he is one with us. "That man, gentlemen," he said when called to time, "is J. W. N. Whitecotton." [Applause.]

Robert Anderson arose to nominate a man familiar with Utah interests, and especially well acquainted with the Fourth judicial district. He was raised in Utah county, resided in Wasatch county and has large business interests in Uintah county. He is a man untrammeled by fixed legal opinions for long practice, but is a man of equal ability with Mr. Whitecotton. More than all else, he is a vote getter, and his name is A. C. Hatch of Wasatch. [Great applause.]

J. P. Davis of Uintah, in an eloquent effort, spoke for the Utah boy, who had been raised among the people and had plucked flowers from the Utah hills in his infancy. The gentleman succeeded in awakening considerable enthusiasm.

L. W. Kenwood of Provo seconded Whitecotton's nomination, and spoke for competency on the judicial bench. Nominations then closed, and a five-minute recess was taken to prepare the ballots.

When it came to a vote, the result stood: Hatch, 48; Whitecotton, 38. On motion of A. S. Jones of Provo, Mr. Hatch's nomination was made unanimous.

A committee of three called upon Mr. Hatch and escorted him to the convention hall, where he spoke feelingly of the honor shown him. Mr. Whitecotton spoke, promising his best support for the party's candidate.

The convention then adjourned.

Book of Mormon Manuscript.

The most valuable manuscript now owned within the limits of the United States, the Federal constitution and the Declaration of Independence alone excepted, has lately come into the possession of George W. Schweich of Richmond, Ray county, this state. The relic in question, which is unique as well as historical, is nothing more or less than the manuscript of the original Book of Mormon, just as it was translated from the golden plate records of the Nephites by Joseph Smith and his associates. If you have a copy of the Book of Mormon to refer to, you will find that the back of the title page bears a notice to the world in the shape of a "Testimony" by the three witnesses to the Divine authenticity of the book.

One of three witnesses who saw the angel which God sent from heaven with the plates and engraving, and who heard the voice of God commanding that they bear record of the same, was David Whitmer, who died at Richmond, January 25, 1888. David Whitmer had long been the sole owner of the manuscript and upon his death it descended by right of heirship to D. J. Whitmer, a son. Not long since D. J. Whitmer was smothered to death in a sand pit near Richmond, and George W. Schweich, a nephew (grandson of David Whitmer, one of the founders of the Mormon church) became sole owner of the valuable document.

In order that the Republic's readers may have an idea of the value of Mr. Schweich's treasure, I will say that a short time prior to David Whitmer's death the Salt Lake hierarchy offered $100,000 in gold for it, and it is believed that they would have made an offer of $500,000 had they thought that there was a prospect of Mr. Whitmer parting with it.—St. Louis Republic.

The Brandt Rape Case.

The Payson Globe is at hand with additional facts relating to the Brandt rape case. It says:

"Charles Brandt, a blacksmith of this city, attempted to rape the 9-year-old daughter of Samuel Francom, Sunday evening about 4 o'clock. While the parents were away attending church he entered the little girl into his house, which is just across the street from the Francom residence, by giving her fifteen cents. After he had got his victim inside he locked the door, and at once proceeded to accomplish his heinous purpose, and no doubt would have succeeded had not the screams of the child attracted some young men near by, who went to the house, and looking through the window saw what was going on. The presence of the boys caused the wretch to desist from his purpose. Marshal Ballard was notified and placed Brandt under arrest and locked him in the city jail." He now lingers in the county jail awaiting the action of the grand jury.
